

“To
many
people
the
most
ob-
vi-
ous
feature
of
a language
is that
it
consists
of
words.”

The

problem
of
the
word
has
worried
general
lin-
guists
for
the
best
part
of
a
century.

In
ves-
ti-
gat-
ing
any
language,
one
can hardly

fail
to
make
di-
vi-
sions
between
units
that
are
word-
like
by
at
least
some
of
the
rel-
e-
vant
cri-
te-
ria.

But
these
units
may
be
simple
or
both
long
and
complex,
and
other
cri-
te-
ria
may
es-
tab-
lish
other
units.

It
is
there-
fore
natural